

Commencing to-morrow evening the Gif-fen Company, that has entertained Rich-mond so well, will enter upon its farewell week, after one of the best series of per-formancs ever known here. Mr. Giffen week, after one of the best series of performancs ever known here. Mr. Giffen came to Richmond as a stranger, and wery few (if any) placed a great deal of credence in his promises, or believed that his faith in a stock company was grounded upon anything but talk of knowledge of the city and a misdirected enthusiasm,
but the record of the past six weeks
stands as a conclusive proof that Mr.
Giffen's confidence and judgment were not misplaced. Though Richmond has not done all she could, yet the appreciation for the most part, has been genuine and liberal, and every member of the company will be glad to play in Richmond

The bill selected for the good-bye week is John Drew's famous comedy, "The Butterfiles," which is from the pen of Henry Guy Carlton, who wrote "A Gilded Fool," Richmonl's favorite play. "The Butterfiles" is similar, to some extent, to "A Gilded Fool," and it did as much for Mr. Drew as the latter play did for Mr. Goodwin. It is written in Mr. Carlton's well-known vein and has, besides, strong high and low comedy, a good, conton's well-known vein and has, besides, strong high and low comedy, a good, consistent, and well-worked-out love-story—two or three of them, in fact. The play is an interesting as well as an amusing one, and, although a comedy, is quite dramatic in several scenes. There is a certain up-to-date quality about Mr. Carlton's plays, and it is especially appropriate. ton's plays, and it is especially prominent in "The Butterflies." The play is a splendid one for a stock company, and one in which the Giffen Company should in "The Butterflies." The play is a spiendid one for a stock company, and one in which for a stock company should appear to excellent advantage. Miss Fitzallan will have a congenial role in Mirlam, although the part will not require much of a strain upon the talented leading lady's ability. Miss Scott will have a part quite like Kitty in "The Wife," one of girlish comedy, but also with a serl-pusside, in Suzanne, one of the best rolesthis popular little favorite has played. Miss Reimer, as Mrs. Stuart Dodge, a disagreeable woman, who is in constant trouble dodging the bills incurred in a frantic effort to keep in the swim unflehe can "land" a wealthy husband for her daughter, will have a part that will not be at all sympathetic, but Miss Reimer's portrayal can be depended upon to be artistic. Miss Wilcox, from the exigencies of the cast, will appear as Mrs. Ossian, and will try to look as dignified and motherly as her youthful face and figure will permit. Mr. Pascoe, in the role kritten for John Drew, should score more extensively than in any previous play. Mr. Kcarney, as Ossian's English friend, will be well placed, while Mr. Carr will have by all odds the best character he has yet played—that of Hiram Green, a bighearted, genuine, self-made man, who knows right and wrong, if he doesn't know that "vase" is pronounced "vaws." Mr. Hawkins, as a tallor, whose whole mission seems to conist of measuring, or attempting to measure, everybody he meets, will "help things 'along." Mr. Payn will play a dudish swell, who is ashamed of everything about his father, except his money, and who receives a well-merited lesson. Mr. Holland will complete the cast as Coddle, a butler, who acts as a sort of self-appointed social mentor to his employer, Hiram Green. With such an attractive play as "The Butterflies" and the last opportunity to enfoy the work of the company, the attendance should be up to the capacity of the Academy. Mathee will be given Wednesday and Saturday.

At the Casino.

At the Casino.

The Casino has presented some great nets, and the headliners of bills to come acts, and the headliners of bills to come are away up in the profession.

Two great acrobats and a female wonder-worker, the Wilton Trio, will be the feature of the bill this week. This act has hever been played in the South. It has been the special and of a farm combination. the special card of a large combination that has played on the Pacific coast for the special card of a large coast for two years, and that recently closed in New York. The Wiltons will play only a few dates, and will then join the combination to go to the Continent. The trio perform a sensational act that will be the talk of 'Richmond. Allan and Delmain, with a comedy sketch built for laugh-making purposes, will be one of the drawing cards. Mr. Allen acts the part of a "club man." His wife catches him upon his return from a night, and the fun goes fast. Hatow and Dunn, a good dancing comedian and a pretty woman, will disguise themselves with burnt cork, and do a lot of down-on-the-levee dancing and cakewalking.

William Muzuz and Adeline Mazett have William Muzuz and Adeline Mazett have an act entirely different from the usual run. Muzuz is made up as a tramp, and Miss Mazett as a railroad man. They entertain in a novel way for a quarter of an hour, and have never falled to score a hit. Barr and Evans, in their comedy sketch, are favorites. They are clever.

Ida Russell, the popular comedienne and craracter actress, is also on the bill.

The usual matinee and night performances will be given.

BARTON HEIGHTS MATTER.

No New Developments in the Street-Car Situation Yesterday.

Nothing of interest developed in connec-ion with the Barton Heights street-car tion with the Barton Heights stret-car fight yesterday. The hands of the Car Company were at work all days, and were not interfered with in any way by the authorities of the town. When they come to one of the fences erected by order of the Council, they simply work up to it on one side and then go around and commence on the other, without tearing it down or employed. emoving it. Town-Attorney Beveridg; was seen late yesterday afternoon, and declined to say exactly what line he would pursue in the matter, but stated that as the representative of the town he proposed to fight to a finish. "If necessary," said he, "when the crisis comes force will be met with force to protect what we believe to be our rights. to protect what we believe to be our rights in this matter."

While Mr. Beveridge would not say that While Mr. precious would not say that he proposed to apply to one of the Su-preme Court Judges for an injunction to restrain the company from proceeding fur-ther with the work, it seemed to be the general impression that he will do so at an early date. He would neither deny or confirm the re-
